

---

ARIZONA STATE UNIVERSITY

Bill Hart is a senior policy analyst on the staff at Morrison Institute, Arizona's oldest think tank and a unit of Arizona State University. Bill's areas of interest include crime, courts, law enforcement, corrections and public mental health care.

Before joining Morrison, Bill spent two decades as a reporter and editor, primarily for newspapers in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. His work has appeared in many publications, including Newsweek, the New York Times, the Detroit Free Press, the Dallas Morning News and The Arizona Republic. He is also the author of Evil: A Primer, published in 2004 by St. Martin's Press.

Since arriving at Morrison, Bill has co-authored How Arizona Compares and Layers of Meaning: Domestic Violence and Law Enforcement Attitudes in Arizona, and has contributed to numerous other institute publications. He holds a bachelor's degree in political science and economics from Brown University and a master's in public affairs from the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University.